

How the Study Works

Study Groups or Arms

As the patient, you will be randomized into one of the below study groups for the next 12 months:

- Continue medication at current dose
- Space out or lower medication dose
- Stop medication completely

Medical Appointments

Appointments for this study will be with your regular rheumatologist and will continue to be every 3 months.

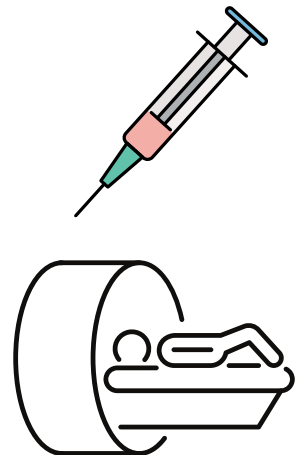

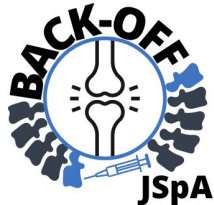

Surveys

You will be asked to fill out surveys at each appointment.

Medical Tests or Procedures

You have the option to do tests at the beginning and end of the study which will be very useful in helping answer tough questions about medication. These baseline tests are blood draws and MRI screenings. Unless something serious is found, you will not get results of these tests since they are only used as benchmarks for the study.

Follow Up

As part of this study, you will be followed for up to 36 months. Once the initial 12 months in the study group you were assigned ends, you will be asked to continue to fill out surveys for up to 24 additional months as a follow up. This will provide much needed information on symptom severity and potential to flare after the initial study period.

Importance of the Study

This study was designed by researchers, doctors, parents and patients as a tool to answer questions about medication use in JSpA. Your participation is very valuable. It will help answer questions for future JSpA patients and families.
